• WHO I AM

I spent years keeping a national bank's critical systems standing. Now I build that same reliability for growing businesses.

Before Launch Forte I was a senior software engineer and reliability engineer at a national bank, on the team responsible for systems that could not go down. That work is where I learned the habits I still build with today: monitor everything, alert before the customer notices, write it down so the next person can run it, and never ship something you cannot explain in one sentence.

I started Launch Forte because I kept meeting owners who had bought good tools and were still doing the work by hand. Proposals, invoices, follow ups, reports, moving information from one place to another. The busywork that keeps you in the business instead of growing it. That is what I take off your plate.

I do this full time, I do not outsource it, and I keep the client list short on purpose. The person who scopes your build is the one who builds it.

OFF THE CLOCK

I work from a small office in Dallas Fort Worth, Texas, with my wife and our daughter close enough to interrupt me at lunch. Off the clock it is the gym, whipping up meals, video games, board games, time with family, and a standing effort not to completely roast in the Texas heat!

• WHAT MAKES THIS DIFFERENT

The whole business first. Then the smallest build that moves it.

Most of what gets posted is a task. I read it for the business underneath: how the money comes in, where it leaks, which tool is the bottleneck, what has to run clean before anything else can. The task is usually one piece of a bigger picture, and the bigger picture is what I am building toward. We start with the smallest piece worth taking, prove it on real data, and stack the next one on it, so the system ends up running the business instead of becoming one more thing to manage.

01	The bigger picture before the build	Every engagement opens with a read of the whole operation and a number on what the problem is costing. The build is whatever that number points to, and it is scoped to fit the next one.
02	Smallest win first	One piece, shipped and watched, then the next. You pay for what moves the business, in the order it needs to move.
03	A few clients at a time	The roster stays short on purpose. The person who scopes your build is the one who builds it, tests it, and answers you.
04	Built to stay up	Monitoring, alerting, and a written runbook on every system, so it tells us before it tells your customers.
05	Personalized approach	Time up front to understand where you are trying to go, then a build shaped to that. Updates come often and read plain, so you never have to chase me or decode a status.

WHO THIS IS FOR

Owners doing real revenue who are still the bottleneck in their own operation, with tools already in place that do not talk to each other, who want the work off their plate for good. Fixed price, tested on your data.

BEFORE YOU COMPARE BIDS

You will see all kinds of people and bids on Upwork, some at a fraction of my number. The difference is usually whether the person has put this in front of real customers before, or is about to learn on yours and your time, and the standard of professionalism and communication, with the intent of what you are asking matched to your vision.

• WHAT HAPPENS NEXT

If this sounds like the way you want it done, the proposal is right below.

"The process was smooth and stress free from start to finish. I would call it a ten out of ten, and I am already planning to come back for the next project."

Chelsea Juels, Founder and CEO, Six Months to Speech

"He stood out from the pack fast. We'll use him for any job we have."

Matt Juels, COO, Six Months to Speech

"He's enabled me to keep running my business with a lean, efficient team!"

THREE WAYS IN

Audit, build, or partnership. Start wherever the problem is.

Most owners start with the audit: a short call, a written read of what is broken and what it is worth fixing, and a number on it. The audit fee credits toward the first build. If the job you posted already names the build, we skip straight to a fixed price proposal.

Audit

I find what is costing you customers and put a number on it. Credits toward the build.

Build

The system the audit points to, built and tested on real data before it goes live.

Partnership

I stay at the table after launch, with a monthly review and a result you can read in dollars.
